Professional Development and Leadership

Significant research shows that schools and organizations that are collaborative, growth-oriented, and take responsible for their children's and their own growth are vital to visioning a compassionate school. It's easy to have high expectations – harder to have a growth mindset...

Building off of the first two workshops on Sept 1st & 15th, part 3 of this 3 part online series, is designed to help in the implementation of a school-wide response to the needs of children and families who have experienced ACEs and Trauma.

The purpose of this workshop is to explore the leadership needed from every member of the organization to respond to such potentially catastrophic events. Together, we'll learn strategies for cultivating self-awareness, growth mindset, resiliency, and self-care. We'll be exposed to various ways organizations can use structures and strategies to promote an environment conducive to building resilience in children and staff.

Join us as we tie together the information presented in part 1 and 2 to engage in trauma responsive care with communities of color.

On Sept 29th, this discussion will be focused on ways we can continue to:

- Hold ourselves accountable in implementing a multi-leveled support system (organizational practices, curriculum, mentoring, family support, social work etc).
- Build our organizational and personal resiliency (moral / spiritual, emotional, personal, and cognitive)
- Assess capacity, build capacity, implement, evaluate and plan
- Infuse a trauma-informed lens into our PD days, coaching, data analysis, interactions, community partnerships, wrap-around services, enrollment, recruitment and more!
